In psychology, dualism with the machine being the body and the "mind" including memory, cognition, reasoning and so on being the ghost, is normally contrasted these days with the scientific evolutionary perspective in which the "mind" - or the ghost, if you like, is a capacity that humans have evolved through the slow process of natural selection, and can be studied via the scientific measure without recourse to notions like "God" or "spirits" or "Descartes". The body and the mind are ordinarily The Ghost In The Machine together, but after the death of the body the mind may continue to exist and function. AI systems are often less of a help, or tool, for human actors, but more of an autonomous replacement.
