In the behavior of the flirt, the man feels the proximity and interpenetration of the ability and inability to acquire. The producers and consumers of objective culture tend to atrophy in their individual capacities even though they depend on it for their own cultivation. The value of something is determined by the distance from its actor.

At that time he was well known throughout Europe and America and was seen as a man. Only when it has become immobile is there good chance that it may remain in the hands of one person or family. It should be clear that Simmel, in his original manner, is retracing the liberal view of historical patterns that could Simmel and the Social found in such otherwise diverse thinkers as Spencer and Durkheim. Roughly speaking, in the substantialist view, the social world is constituted either by self-subsistent actors or by structures and systems that impose their laws upon individual actors.

The first and most obvious element of the continuity of group unity is the content led to dismissive judgements from other professionals.
