The biblical account of Pentecost in the second chapter of the book of Acts describes the sound of a mighty rushing wind and "divided tongues like fire" coming to rest on the apostles. He notes: . Few of our respondents claimed that they can interpret tongues.

Therefore, he concluded that glossolalia is not "a specimen of human language" . But obviously the order of words might be jumbled. Glossolalia is a very important element in the life of Pentecostal Churches and is at the centre of their spirituality. For instance, they fall down, crawl on the ground no matter how dirty it is and roll over with tremendous speed as a whirlwind.

But with near certainty they are not languages in the sense of human languages also experience euphoric or ecstatic states whilst practicing. This conforms with the notion that in meditation one has a controlled focus while losing a sense of self.
