Think of such current examples as Saddam Hussein, a boy beaten and tortured daily by his stepfather, who grew up to enjoy the close-up Revolution from Within: A Book of Self-Esteem of others; or President Ceausescu, whose police state normalized his own earliest years of living in one room with nine siblings and an alcoholic, sadistic father. If you want to imagine what might be called a situational or perhaps a traumatic self-esteem problem, try thinking about a writer who has spent years with no time to write, feels she has an unwritten book in every toe and elbow and tooth, finally achieves the enormous luxury of enough solitude in which to begin, and then blows it on of the wrong pages. As a woman, a parent, a child, and a human thinker, this book speaks to me. Don't worry, this is not a self-help, how-to-love-yourself book.
